

ABSTRACT

[0097] A static memory device that utilizes differential current bit line drivers to write information into the device's memory cells, and differential current sensing read amplifiers to read information from the cells. The drivers and amplifiers operate using limited differential current. The use of limited differential current, as opposed to voltages, reduces the power consumed by the device and increases the speed of read and write operations.